Bayero University defeated University of Jos 3-1 in the final of the soccer event thus crowned the new champions of NUSSA football category.

Joseph Goeshalong gave the Unijos an early lead when he tapped in a simple finish at the expense of BUK's defensive blunder, however, ten minutes after, Rabi'u Mohammed Sagir made a superlative pass to Abdulmajid Mohammed, who rounded Unijos goalkeeper to score a fantastic goal that restored BUK's hopes.

Two minutes after the equalizer, Murtala Garba received an inch- perfect pass from the majestic midfielder, Isa Jibrin (Rabah Madjer) to score a superb goal and put BUK into a driving seat.

At the resumption of the second stanza, Unijos mounted pressure on BUK team searching for an equalizer but the water- tight defense marshaled by Umar Lazy thwarted all efforts and the introduction of talismanic and physical Sulaiman Garba in the midfield made the situation worse for the Josites.

CDA Conducts 2nd International Conference on Drylands

By Nura Garba

Scholars from different parts of the world gathered at the 2nd International Conference on Drylands organized by the Centre of Dryland Agriculture, Bayero University, Kano to discuss and deliberate on agricultural diversification with a view to fine-tuning sustainable strategies to address food insecurity in the drylands of the sub-Saharan Africa.

At the opening ceremony on Tuesday, 13th December, 2016, the Director of the Centre, Professor Jibrin M. Jibrin, who delivered the opening remarks, said the CDA was promoting the sustainable use of the fragile natural resources of the drylands through the training of high level manpower that would work in the private sector, as well as various agricultural research, training and development organizations to address the problems and realize available opportunities.

“The research activities of the centre are interdisciplinary, focusing on climate change and the dryland cropping and animal production environment aimed at understanding complexities of the interaction,” he said.

In his welcome address, the Chairman of the Local Organizing Committee, Professor Adamu Idris Tanko, said the increasingly serious situation relating to climate change and the global decline of water resources had amplified the enormity of global food crises that several global efforts were being made to address the issues that related to these. He added that in Africa, “we believe in collective approach and we are here to collectively present our efforts that focus efficient water use, water conservation and general agricultural challenges in the global drylands.”

Declaring the conference open, the Vice Chancellor, Professor Muhammd Yahuza Bello, said the gathering of scholars, administrators, policy makers, practitioners, investors and other stakeholders in the field of agriculture and related discipline was again to address critical issues of agricultural development.

The Vice Chancellor explained that the 2nd International Conference taking place within two months after the earlier one showed the commitment of Bayero University in advancing the course of sustainable development through training and research in diverse fields of human endeavor.

Delivering a keynote address titled: “The End of Diversification? Current Trends in Dryland Research,” Professor Mike Mortimore of Drylands Research, U.K.

said, despite an increasingly sophisticated understanding of dryland environments and societies, the uses now being made of the diversification concept in parts of Asia exhibited many of the shortcomings of the earlier work done in Africa. He said it took scientists more than decades to transform a perceived desertification crisis in the Sahel into a non-event.

Also speaking at the occasion, the Australian High Commissioner to Nigeria, Mr. Paul Lehman, likened Nigeria to Australia in terms of politics, climatic change and socio-cultural differences. He called for effective institutional collaborations to address the food crisis.

There were goodwill messages from Professor Jesse Njoka, the Director, African Drylands Institute for Sustainability, University of Nairobi, Kenya, Prof Issouffou Amadou from the Department of Crop Production, University of Maradi, Professor Dauda Kone from University of Cote d' Ivoire and a representative of ICRISAT, Dr. Hakeem Ajeigbe.

In a communiqué issued at the end of the conference, it was recommended that there was the need for greater coordination, partnership and collaboration among all the stakeholders in crops and livestock production in the formulation and implementation of policies and programmes directed at increasing agricultural resilience and productivity.

The communiqué called for increased research and innovation on water and soils management as a key driver for the sustainable production of crops and livestock, as well as for the mitigation of the impact of climate change.

The conference was themed “Agricultural Diversification: A Panacea to Food Insecurity.”
